a. BACKGROUND INFORMATION:

In St. John's Church on March 23, 1775, Patrick Henry delivered the stirring "Liberty or Death" speech which sounded a clarion call for his fellow Virginians. There, in the third great speech of his career, the spellbinding orator of the War for Independence attained a measure of undying fame.

Henry already had been in the public eye for a dozen years, since his brilliant defense of colonial self-government in the "Parson's Cause" of 1763. Two years later, his "Virginia Resolutions" respecting the infamous Stamp Act stirred the colonies and brought him to recognized leadership of the radical party in Virginia. None who heard him was likely to forget the fiery speech which ended with the words: "Caesar had his Brutus--Charles the first, his Cromwell--and George the Third--may profit by their example."

He continued to hold the forefront of action during the next decade of increasing colonial agitation. As a delegate to the First Continental Congress in September 1774, Henry was a strong supporter of radical measures, and his conduct gave evidence of strong nationalist leanings.

Back in Virginia, the royal governor, Lord Dunmore, called a meeting of the General Assembly for late in November, but prorogued the meeting when he learned of the participation of the Virginia leaders in "The Association" to boycott British goods. Members of the prorogued assembly arranged to meet in Richmond on March 20, 1775. For the meeting place they chose the largest building in the community, the "New Church" or the "Church on Richmond Hill," as it was variously known at the time.

When the Convention assembled on the appointed date, its membership included most of the leaders of Virginia politics. With most counties represented by two delegates, the membership of approximately 120 men included George Washington, Thomas Jefferson, Patrick Henry, George Wythe, Benjamin Harrison, Edmund Pendleton, Robert Carter Nicholas, Carter Braxton, George Mason, Richard Henry Lee, Thomas Nelson, Jr., Richard Bland and Andrew Lewis.

The tone of the Convention at first was conciliatory, but Henry soon offered a series of resolutions to put the colony into a state of defense. Henry's resolutions were defended by Washington, Jefferson and Richard Henry Lee, though the conservative leaders -- including Pendleton, Bland Nicholas, and Harrison -- attacked them as rash and provocative. On March 23, Henry rose to defend the resolutions in a short speech which closed with the stirring words:

There is no retreat but in submission and slavery! Our chains are forged. Their clanking may be heard on the plains of Boston! The war is inevitable -- and let it come!! I repeat it, sir, let it come!!!

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

In St. John's Church on March 23, 1775, Patrick Henry delivered the stirring "Liberty or Death" speech which sounded a clarion call for his fellow Virginians. There, in the third great speech of his career, the spellbinding orator of the War for Independence attained a measure of undying fame. The church has been altered several times since 1772. The church and southern half of the cemetery are owned by the congregation of St. John's Episcopal Church; the northern half of the cemetery by the City of Richmond.

Item 7 cont'd

It is vain, sir, to extenuate the matter. Gentlemen may cry peace, peace, but there is no peace. The war is actually begun! The next gale that sweeps from the north will bring to our ears the clash of resounding arms! Our brethren are already in the field! Why stand we here idle? What is it that gentlemen wish? What would they have? Is life so dear or peace so sweet, as to be purchased at the price of chains and slavery? Forbid it, Almighty God -- I know not what course others may take; but as for me, give me liberty or give me death!

Henry's speech swept the Convention to his viewpoint, and his resolutions were passed. True to the prophecy of his words, news of the outbreak of fighting at Lexington and Concord came within a short time, and the colonies were at war.

The church in which Henry made his stirring speech was built in 1740-41 on land donated by Col. William Byrd and remained the only Episcopal church in Richmond until 1814. Originally constructed as a simple rectangular building, 25 feet wide and 40 feet long with the long axis running east and west, the church was enlarged in December 1772. At that time, an addition was built onto the north side of the church and the interior was so rearranged that the addition became the nave. A belfry was constructed over the west end of the original church at the same time. This was the church which existed at the time of Henry's famous speech.

The church has been altered several times since 1772. In 1880 the nave was increased in size and the interior of the church was rearranged. In the next few years the original belfry was taken down and replaced by a tower and bell at the north end of the church. A vestry room was added to the south end of the church in 1880, giving it the cross shape it now has. A hurricane blew down the church spire in 1896 and the replacement was similar to the original spire which stood on the church at the time of Henry's speech.

In 1799, the City of Richmond added two lots to the church property, and the church cemetery became a public burying ground. It was the only public cemetery in Richmond until 1826. Among the graves are those of George Wythe and of Elizabeth Arnold Poe, mother of Edgar Allen Poe.

The church is attractively maintained and is one of the most noted of Richmond's historic sites. Despite a lack of adequate parking space, visitation averages about 60,000 persons a year.
